

Transmitting live at EuroPCR 2008

Live case transmission is the educational building block on which the scientific programme of EuroPCR is built. The number of centres involved has increased over the years, to ensure you are provided with a broad range of expertise. These centres use different techniques and make different strategic options – this diversity allows you a larger vision of the possibilities available for use in your daily practice.

The 17 centres transmitting at EuroPCR in 2008 are required to complete several preparatory steps – finding appropriate cases, getting patient approval, entering the case information plus back-ups... time needed for this is substantial, and the deadlines are short. We realise their work load is important, and that often the whole team is involved, working overtime to ensure they are on time.

We'd like to express our sincere thanks to the teams involved in the pre-Course work, the live transmissions themselves – and the very important follow-up.
